

FAMILY DIALOGUE

We believe that any family can try Family Dialogue with hope of some measure of success, by using the suggested helps and by avoiding the pitfalls described here. If the couple has a positive attitude toward the possibility of success in their own family with Family Dialogue, most probably it will work for them.

- I. HOW OFTEN: From the experience of families from all over the country, we've discovered that once a week is most worthwhile. It is not law, however. Each family has it's own wants and needs. We do know of a family that did dialogue every day for the time they were on a camping vacation and it was good. But generally, more frequently than once a week can be burdensome to families and can become a chore and destructive to family relationships.

Less than once per week, it has been found, does not build trust. Family members lose touch with each other between times and any benefits that have been gained in the previous family dialogues can be lost.

- II. THE WEDS OF FAMILY DIALOGUE:

W - WRITE:

1. Some families will find it most advantageous to write just before dialoguing, while others will be most successful with each member of the family writing at a time most convenient for him/her.
2. Advantages to writing just before dialoguing: It is part of the whole pattern (family assembles, perhaps prays and sets buzzer for ten minutes, writes and begins the dialogue.) Another plus is that the feelings are most alive when they have just been written.
3. Disadvantages to writing just before dialoguing: Too structured for some families. Also, some members of the family may choose to write when the spirit moves him/her at another time.
4. The love letter concept is most commonly thought to be a concept that develops within the children as time passes and as they become aware that their parents are writing in the form of a love letter. Forcing children to use the love letter seems to be a disadvantage in that it may cause more discord than if the children are given the freedom to write in whatever form they wish. Writing in some way is a must, though, with most all families, if family dialogue is to be a success.
5. Children who are too young to write: They may draw pictures or dictate their letters to another member of the family. (Then during the reading, the words could either be whispered in the child's ear and then repeated outloud, or another member of the family could just read it for the child.)

FAMILY DIALOGUE

6. Feelings in the love letter: Not necessarily sticking to feelings when writing in the family seems to be an advantage. Unlike conjugal dialogue, where we write only feelings in our letters, but the family letters may contain thoughts, etc., but it should be carefully explained what feelings are and their importance as a core part of us. We could encourage them to write their feelings down and even make up a list of feelings words for them to refer to, but it seems best not to insist on strictly feelings or to correct them if they give an opinion or belief, etc. It's important to remember that family dialogue does not equate to conjugal dialogue.

E - EXCHANGE

 Please do try different methods to see what works best.

1. It is a good idea to consider not exchanging as a possibility. In this case, each member of the family reads aloud his or her own letter.
2. Another option is for everyone to pass books to be read silently by each other.
3. Or everyone may have a choice of reading his/her book or passing it.
4. One member of the family may read all books.
5. Non-verbal is a means to develop openness in family dialogue. Exchanging with a kiss may be good.

D - DIALOGUE

1. There are many ways to do this:
 - a. The sharing may start spontaneously with anyone starting that wishes to start, and continuing at random, or go around the room.
 - b. We might decide that everyone has to share. The obvious disadvantage is that there may be someone that just will not share, and what do you do then? How insistent can we be and still be loving, concerned and aware of that person?
 - c. There may or may not be comments allowed after each person shares. Or it may be better for some families to wait until everyone has finished sharing. But it must be made clear that family dialogue time is a very special time in the family to focus on each other's unique goodness and lovability, and to try to communicate more fully and deeply with one another. We all have to understand that this special time is not for picking apart each other's letters or comments, or person-hoods. Couples should make every effort to explain garbage dumping to the children before they begin a family dialogue at all. A danger is that a child garbage dumps anyway and a parent points it out, not deliberately perhaps, but damage is done to the confidence to share. We can be gentle and comment that we should focus on the good and positive.

d. Non-verbal is important in the dialogue, too. Holding hands and eye contact, facial expressions or body language are all part of the way we communicate.

S - SELECT: There are many ways to do this.

Try them and discover what is right for your family:

1. Select the question from the family's activities. (HDIFA us on the picnic?)
2. Select the question from the family's experiences. (HDIFA us on Christmas?)
3. Select the question from the family's moods. (HDIFA us as a family when we all feel edgy or resentful with each other?)
4. The question may come out of the last week's dialogue.
5. The question may come from scripture. We can use the Sunday scripture, or a line or two from it. All members of the family might want a turn at choosing the scripture passage to use, as well as the question.
6. When we select the question may vary from time to time. We may select right after a family dialogue, or we might wait until we are ready to family dialogue again. If the question is chosen before hand, it may be put on the refrigerator or bulletin board. We should be aware in this section of WEDS and in all the other sections of the diversity that is possible in family dialogue, and the diversity that may occur among the different families that try family dialogue. We are unique as families, too.

III. 90 DAYS of DIALOGUE QUESTIONS

This is a possibility that families may use. Try family dialogue for 90 days - once a week for 90 days.
